TAKE FLIGHT

Just up Michigan's Sunrise Coast, past the speeding interstate, is a community where vacations begin and never end. A place where the sun is served fresh daily. A place people came because of the land, but stayed because of the water. A place that defended our country and protected the globe. A place where the legend of the lumberjack was born. A place where life on these sandy beaches thrives through all four seasons. We are Oscoda, and we are proud of this place we call home. This place where opportunity truly exists. We invite you to spread your wings and take flight.

Oscoda Township is located in the northeastern portion of Iosco County, in the upper lower peninsula of the State of Michigan. It is bordered by Lake Huron to the east, Plainfield Township to the west, Wilber Township and Au Sable Township to the south, and Alcona County to the north. It is a large rectangular-shaped Township, equating to three of Michigan's traditional 36-mile square townships.

The Oscoda-Au Sable area attracted early French explorers because of the abundance of natural resources and game. Oscoda is a Native American Indian term meaning "a pebbly prairie". The Au Sable River running through Oscoda was named by the French, and means a river of sand. Louis Chevalier was the first to establish a claim in this area. He built a trading post at the mouth of the river, and soon a small community grew.

Before becoming a settler's community, Oscoda was home to the Chippewa Indians. One of the few physical remnants of the tribe is the Chippewa Indian Cemetery on Indian Road. It is an artifact and historic record of the original Native American settlements in the area. Currently, the cemetery is administered by the Oscoda United Methodist Church.

As the first settlements grew into a more permanent community, the logging industry also contributed to significant growth in this area. The river served as an excellent means to transport logs to the mouth of the river where eight lumber mills were operational. The timber was then transported by ships from the docks on Lake Huron to the markets in Detroit and Chicago. By the early 1900s the lumber era came to a close, and in a massive fire both the Oscoda and Au Sable communities were almost totally destroyed.

The community is served primarily by US-23 and Business Loop US-23 as well as M-65. According to the Michigan Department of Transportation, US-23 through downtown has an annual average daily traffic count of 16,758 cars per day. The stretch of US-23 in Oscoda is part of the US-23 Heritage Route.

Oscoda's advantage is a high quality of life for those who enjoy outdoor and waterfront activities and low cost of housing. It is a well-known vacation destination that thousands of families flock to every summer. It has a traditional downtown that is steps away from Lake Huron and ripe for reinvestment.

Since the early part of the 20th century, the military base has gone by many names; Loud-Reames Aviation Field, Camp Skeel, Oscoda Army Airfield, Oscoda Air Force Base and Wurtsmith Air Force Base. Regardless of its name, the base always played an important part in the ever-evolving National defense.

From the early days of bi-planes practicing bombing runs and landing on a frozen lake, training Tuskegee airmen, Air Defense Command fighter jets on alert, B-52s with Hound dog missile and in the end, KC-135 and B-52s with air launched cruise missiles on alert.

Today, the Wurtsmith Air Museum works to preserve the history of the men and women that served, so their stories and the history of aviation in northeastern Michigan can be shared with future generations.

In 1923, Major Carl Spatz came to Oscoda and proposed the construction of an airfield for army aircraft. Up until this point in history, this was the most significant event defining the development of the community. At its peak, the base military population was approximately 3,135 personnel plus dependents. The base was permanently closed in 1993 by the Department of Defense. Now called the Oscoda Wurtsmith Airport, in 1993 it was opened as a public airport, and in 1994 the Township took over the area as the Redevelopment Authority. The Authority's purpose was to operate and maintain the airport. In 1997, the Michigan Legislature created the Wurtsmith Renaissance Zone, a designation exempting businesses and residents within the 5,000-acre zone from all state and most local taxes. Over the years, different parts of the air base have been occupied by various private and public organizations and the former base has been redeveloped and integrated into the community.

Currently, the old base has a varied mixture of uses which include Kalitta Air, Phoenix Composite Solutions, Phoenix Flight Solutions, HAECO Americas Engine Services, and several other aviation-related businesses. There are several manufacturing facilities and a telecommunications company, and more than 40 other private businesses. In addition to the industry, there is also restored base housing, multiple family residential complexes, churches, a medical care facility, the public library, a community college, performing arts theater, and two museums including the Wurtsmith Air Museum and the Veterans Memorial Park of Northeast Michigan. Overall, the entities at the former base provide over 1,300 jobs to the area and about 700 privately-owned residences.

Basically, this form of government prescribes that a Board's role is that of a legislative policy-making body which determines not only the local laws that regulate community life, but also determines what public policy is and gives direction to the Township Superintendent to administer the affairs of the Township government in a businesslike and prudent manner.

The Township Supervisor serves as the Chairperson of the Board. All members, except for the Superintendent, are elected officials.
